The excessive use of social media has become a burning issue for researchers. According to a Glasgow University study, one in five adolescents in the United Kingdom are spending more than five hours on social media before they go to bed. The study also found that an increased amount of time in front of the screen could have a negative impact on a young person's health and education. The university report asks for support to be given to help teenagers find a balance between online social interactions and an appropriate sleep schedule. The report also urges parents to reduce their kids' screen time through encouraging them to go out and take up social and physical activities.

2. Circle the right option.

(5x0.5 = 2.5 marks)

Researchers said that children who grow up feeling close to nature are happier than others. They added that children who feel (invited / forced / connected) to nature have a positive view towards life. That is why parents should take their kids (off / to / at) the wild, help them learn to protect the planet and be happy. "Our children are the future (loggers / offenders / protectors) of this planet. Therefore, inculcating positive behaviour and environmental care in them is important," said Dr Laura Berrera from Sonora Institute of Technology. "(Be / Being / Been) close to nature is not just loving it (beauty / beautiful / beautifully), but also appreciating its variety and feeling part of it," she added.

3. Put the bracketed words in the correct tense or form:

As schools close their doors due to the coronavirus pandemic, and as the United Kingdom goes into lockdown, stars are turning into teachers. Many (fame) famous faces are helping out by launching daily lessons on their social media accounts to help keep children busy and (involve) involved. Recently, Myleene Klass, a British talented singer and pianist, (launch) has launched her own YouTube channel. The star (great) greatly enjoys teaching the children about music with regular videos. She posted on Instagram: "Music has always been seen as an (excite) exciting subject. But now, it's what seems to be soothing people's minds and souls. So let's pass on the love and enjoy ourselves."
